There are already Dillingham traditions at the Hippodrome-the third seaon of his management of the people's

Big Show."

Nat Wills, for instance, and his telegrams, and tuneful Belle Story, Toto (tater with Pavlowa), Annette Kellermann, Marcelline and John Philip Sousa all of these and many others were represented in the scene called "The Hippodrome Workshop." But that was only a part of "Cheer L," as the first division was called. Fred Walton and the Grigoettos Claire Rochester and Arthur Hill stunts. There were also Gorman's div-as imitation animals vied with Powers's elephants and the Four Amaranthys, who were other clever mimic animals, and led up to Sophye Barnard's sing-ing of "What a Wonderful Mate You'd

Fred Walton was the familiar soldier in "The Music Shop," which closed "Cheer I.," but before that Nat Wills

Mr. Dillingham had called his usual collaborators to his side in planning last night's enterprise. R. H. Burnside, in-ventor of all the striking scenic and fancing effects at this theatre, was again at the head, while Raymond Hubbell had a free hand in composing all the original music he could think of for the accompaniment to the graceful and startling eccasion, with no limits on his poetic present in the "Cheer II.," which opened with more of Mr. Wills. He had the asville celebrities that Mr. Dillingham had raked in with a generous hand.

But none of these episodes in "Cheer II." was equal to its concluding pageant of our history. From Christopher Columbus down to Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson they were all represented in the fiesh. John Philip Sousa had arranged the music for this series of tableaux which had its figures from every period of history. The Spanish, the French, the Dutch and the English—cutstanding figures from all the periods. outstanding figures from all the periods of our national life—were represented.

Programme of Novelty.

Enjoyable as the sight of the Hippodrome traditions was, it was the novelty of the programme that brought "Cheer Up" to the best standard of Hippodrome entertainment during the last two years. There were taken from the vaudevalles three artists who made pictures in such various mediums as paint, rags and chalk, and then a jungle view with wriggling apes and birds in striking combinations of pastel colors. Square, the Moranos, one swinging in a miniature airplane and the other hanging by one ankle, sent their novel thrills through the spectators. The inside of the Hippodrome was the scene of Bud Snyder's exploits on the bicycle with his comic assistants that kept the audience in an uproar of laughter, as a prelude to a stretch of Exprian landscape against which Claire Rochester, in her newly acquired barytone, chanted of "The Queen of the Nile." The feature of this scene, however, was the marvellous acrobats of the Arabians, who whirled about unceasingly like hysterical pinwheels.

Troop Ship Sails Away.

All these alternately beautiful and comic, melodious or rythmical incidents of the second act were but a prelude to the gigantic assault made on the ocular powers at its end. Even the sight of the troop ship sailing out of the bay was not to be compared to the final pageant, which in exquisite color and movement epitomized American history movement epitomized American history from the first day. Through a long peristyle the gayly clad figures ap-proached the audience, illustrating on their arrival at the end of the stage by son of his management of the people's characteristic dance the nationality playhouse opened last night with the usual brilliancy—and a part of "Cheer there; and so were their flags. But it was first a fluttering eagle in electric lights and then the national emblem new piece, was devoted to recalling them to the spectators. Before their eyes passed some of the best remembered features of "Hip, Hip Hooray!" and "The lights and then the national emblem shining out in myriads of incandescent bulbs that brought the second act to a stirring close and the audience, cheering, to its feet.
